

Partners

dropping knowledge

Curiosity has forever been fueling human development. dropping knowledge, an international non-profit based in Berlin and Boston, uses this power to promote global dialogue and social change.

Ask yourself

dropping knowledge calls upon people from all over the world to ask questions and invites others to answer them (Photo: dk) dropping knowledge wants to enable positive change in the world. Its founders believe that asking questions and spreading them through technology and visual communication can be a powerful catalysts for change. Started in 2003, the initiative seeks to inspire people around the world to raise the questions that matter to them. It also functions as a social amplifier, offering a place for knowledge exchange, connecting individuals with engaged NGOs, and promoting responsible action.

The seed content for the platform was generated through "The Table of Free Voices" in Berlin on September 9, 2006 where 112 personalities engaged with 100 questions donated by the global public. Their 11,200 answers are publicly available on the dropping knowledge website. By joining dropping knowledge as a founding partner in 2005, Allianz aims to initiate new sustainable projects and learn from the outcomes of the global dialog.

The Social Web 2.0

The website, developed by the German Research Center for Artificial Intelligence, allows to ask questions and discuss solutions (Photo: dk)

The seed content for the platform was generated through "The Table of Free Voices" in Berlin on September 9, 2006 where 112 personalities engaged with 100 questions donated by the global public. Their 11,200 answers are publicly available on the dropping knowledge website. By joining dropping knowledge as a founding partner in 2005, Allianz aims to initiate new sustainable projects and learn from the outcomes of the global dialog.

© Allianz 2007, All Rights Reserved